EXPERIENCE

My background sits at the intersection of financial analysis and hands-on leadership. Most recently, I worked as a tax auditor with the California Franchise Tax Board, reviewing tax returns and financial statements and preparing audit reports across a full caseload of concurrent engagements under strict regulatory deadlines. I communicated directly with taxpayers and accounting professionals on financial documentation and compliance.

Before that, I was a tax associate at Weiss Accountancy LLP, preparing federal and state returns for individuals and businesses (1040, 1120, 1120S, 1041, 990) and handling bookkeeping, financial statement preparation, and financial projections directly with clients, along with budgeting and financial reporting support.

Before my financial career, I served as a Sergeant in the United States Army, completing two deployments to Afghanistan. I led and supervised soldiers in high-risk operational environments, managed personnel training, operational readiness, and mission planning, and stayed accountable for equipment and resources under demanding conditions. That experience shaped how I lead now: set clear standards, stay accountable for outcomes, and trust the team closest to the work.

I also hold a Bachelor of Science in Civil Engineering from Cal Poly Pomona, giving me a working technical understanding of physical operations alongside my accounting background. That combination of financial rigor and operational fluency is what I bring to evaluating and running a business day to day, from reading the numbers to understanding what happens on the shop floor.

My background combines financial discipline, leadership experience, and technical foundation that most buyers cannot offer. I'm acquiring a business to operate it, hands-on and full-time, for the long term. For a seller who cares about legacy and continuity, I am a buyer who matches that commitment.
